3. Career Exploration for Students

Engaging Students Can Be a Challenge!

Career exploration is sometimes limited to only what students have been exposed to. Often students pursue careers based on familiarity. That means choosing careers their parents have had or suggested, or those glamorized on television and social media, or others they encounter as adolescents. But there is value in thinking outside the box when it comes to career exploration.

Many students can't see an opportunity because for them one isn't present. The opportunity only presents itself when a student's self-esteem and belief are activated.

There's significant research on positive psychology in schools. Schools are actively pursuing Positive Education Programs. Like many other countries our schools have aimed for academic excellence as primary evidence for their success. But there is a growing need for a more holistic approach with a stronger focus on well-being leading to career choices that offer hope and opportunity.

The starting point of every career plan is self-discovery. Who I am, what am I good at and how I can make a difference? Key competencies in building and managing a career revolve around the dynamics of identifying oneself, being aware of behaviours and attitudes, relating to others and exploring opportunities.

MyCareerMatch is more than just about career choices. We help students discover their strengths and employability skills. We encourage education and self-empowerment so that students have a positive image of themselves and what they're capable of achieving.
